THE JAMES RIVER VALLEY. The following is a letter from a Scotch traveller, descriptive of the James River Valley : "It is not extravagant to say that the Valley of the James River, from Richmond to the mountains, a distance of about two hundred miles, is unsurpassed by any portion of the Old and New World that I have seen. The scenery is of the most picturesque, beautiful and varied character. Many of these seenes are exquisitely lovely, and to be appreciated must be seen. The fine old mansions that crown the heights along the river are tastefully situated, and rival the country seats of the Old World in everything except architectural display. These have long been the abodes of the lavish hospitality and high social virtues which have rendered the Old Dominion so celebrated in the annals of this country. Many of these fine old estates may now be purchased at very reduced prices, and will doubtless fall a prey to Northern speculators. Many of them are still held by the descendants of the Scotch and English families, who settled in this valley at a very early period. If their friends and kindred over the water would only embrace the opportunity to occupy this beautiful country, they would find a people of congenial tastes, and receive a cordial welcome and rich return for the investment of their money. The cli mate is delightful. One coming from the fogs and mists of Britain feels a pleasure that is new to him in breathing this atmosphere, while all nature seems to dance and ring under the influence of the bright skies. The soil is naturally very fertile, and when exhausted is easily reclaimed. When these lands were new, sixty told of wheat was quite a common yield. I have been shown lands which are said to have been in cultivation for one hundred and sixty years without manures, and still produce fair crops. The head waters of this stream drain an extensive limestone region, and the alluvial bottoms contain an admixture of lime which renders them inexhaustible. The bottom lands on streams flowing entirely through sandstone regions are not so rich, and said not to be so durable. The productions are numerous and valuable. The chief among them are wheat, maize, and tobacco. All the vegetables and fruits of the temperate zone grow here in great profusion. The apple is the finest I have ever seen, and the pear equal to any. The soil and climate are admirably suited to the growth of the grape, and this country is destined at no distant period to take high rank among the wine-producing regions of the world. Experiments show that one thousand dollars per acre may be realized from that business. Hop culture might also be made very profitable. The hop plant is indigenous and very prolific. It is worthy of note that a larger amount of money is made to the hand here than in any other portion of the United States and with judicious management and manuring these lands would very soon produce more per acre. The present mode of cultivation is exceedingly careless and trying to the soil. The forests, in beauty and grandeur, far supass anything that can be seen in Europe. The great variety of majestic trees, with their rich and many tinted foliage, shrubs, wild flowers, and clinging vines, presents one of the richest and most beautiful pictures I have eyer beheld. These forests clothe the hills and mountain sides to the very tops. This is one of the most charming features of the mountain scenery of Virginia .--Coal, and all the most valuable minerals abound in this region, and will ere long become a source of immense trade and wealth. Waterpower, too, is without limit, and the whole country is filled with springs of the purest and best water. A canal runs through the whole length of the Valley, and railroads on each side a few miles distant. These railroads connect at Lynchburg, a large and flourishing town, about one hundred and forty miles above Richmond. This valley is the natural route for cheap and easy communication between the Great West, and the Atlantic seaboard, and will one day become the great thoroughfare of the North American Continent. Surely nature has showered its choicest blessings upon this lovely valley. The the valley of the Connecticut river, in bleak

New England, command readily three hundred dollars per acre. With such advantages of climate, soil and production, this difference in price cannot long exist. This country is now open for occupation, and is well suited to the people of every clime. It presents, in my humble judgment, much greater advantages at this time, especially to the English, than the far West. Here, all tastes may be gratified, and every class and condition of men find employment. When this field is fully occupied and developed, it will be one of the richest and most beautiful countries that the sun shines upon."-Lynch, Virg.
